NJLM Conference Background

The nation's largest municipal conference has more than a century's experience bringing together the community of local government officials. Each year, this annual event offers educational sessions covering topics from the basics of today's municipal challenges, to more advanced approaches to technical issues.

Event organizers expect 16,000 attendees for the three-day learning experience which yields benefits throughout the year. The conference offers approximately 125 panels, clinics, workshops, and other educational sessions and will showcase over 700 exhibitors.

Attendees represent a vertical "slice" of local government officials involved in the decision-making process. NJ local elected and appointed officials, purchasing agents, department heads, public works and professional administrators will be represented.
